

ABSTRACT

In a digital circuit comprising an asynchronous circuit, the supply voltage of the asynchronous circuit is varied by 5 means of a random voltage jitter. The random variation of the supply voltage causes a time jitter in the processing of the individual operations within the asynchronous circuit, whereby an artificial synchronizing of individual measurements in side channel attacks is prevented.